Fibrous dysplasia of bone (FD) is characterized by the proliferation of the fibroblasts and deposition of fibrous connective tissue in the affected bone. The accumulation of collagen in the fibrous matrix and its preponderant amount in the form of hyaline cartilage prompted us to study the presence and distribution of collagen in FD. Among the various collagens detected by electrophoresis on sodium dodecyl sulfate-polyacrylamide gel, type I was the predominant form, type III was the least found and the content of type VI was variable. Polyacrylamide gel electrophoresis and an antibody which reacts with collagen type II detected the presence of collagen II in FD. The immunofluorescence study revealed immunostain for collagen I and collagen III in the fibrous connective tissue matrix, osteoid and cementum-like tissue. The study thus confirmed the deposition of collagen in FD, and indicated the preferential occurrence of types I and III, and the variable presence of collagen II and type VI.Q: Generate a column name from a column name using a pattern I have a column name = "v([A-Za-z]+)".
